Considering an application for an EEA family permit

About this guidance What is an EEA family permit? Considering an application for an EEA family permit Outcome of application for an EEA family permit	This section tells you who can get a European Economic Area (EEA) family permit and the rules which they must meet to be issued with the permit. The EEA family permit system is administered by Visa services. However, you may be asked to consider an application for an EEA family permit in the following circumstances: <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Referred cases - the entry clearance officer (ECO) has referred the case for a decision on the application, because there are wider policy issues involved.</li><li>• Deferred cases - the ECO has deferred the case for advice or for further information to be obtained. You must remember in a deferred case the responsibility for the final decision rests with the ECO.</li></ul> Under European Community law, applications for EEA family permits must be treated as a priority case. See related links: <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Direct family members</li><li>• Extended family members.</li></ul> Under regulation 19(1) of the Immigration (EEA) Regulations 2006, an applicant for an EEA family permit and their EEA national family member can be excluded from the UK on the grounds of public policy, security or health. relationship with the EEA national.

For more information on how to assess if a partnership is durable, see related link: 05 Residence card applications.

When you assess an application from an extended family member, you must be satisfied the applicant:

- holds a valid passport or national identity card
- provides enough documentary evidence such as birth certificates or other evidence which confirms how they are related to their EEA national family member who is exercising free movement rights in the UK.

For guidance on establishing dependency see related link: 05 Residence card applications.

Unmarried partners

Under regulation 8 (5) of the Immigration (EEA) Regulations 2006, a non EEA national who is an unmarried partner of an EEA national can qualify as an extended family member if they show their relationship is durable. There are no specific rules set as a definitive way to prove a relationship is durable. It is up to the applicant to provide evidence to demonstrate this.

For example, you may ask an applicant to provide evidence to show the couple have been living together in a relationship similar to marriage for at least two years and intend to continue living together permanently. You should expect any previous marriages or relationships similar to marriage have ended and the couple are not blood relatives. In making a decision, you must consider each case on its own merits.

If the conditions above are met, you must be satisfied the applicant is a durable partner falling within regulation 8(5). You must consider all the facts and circumstances, as there may be cases where even though one or more of these points are not met you are still satisfied they are in a durable relationship.

For help with a specific case, speak to your line manager or a senior caseworker.
